[Reports to the Surgeon-General United States Marine-Hospital Service.]

Smallpox on the bark D. A. Small at New Bedford, Mass., from Cape de Verde Islands.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS., May 19, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to report that bark D. A. Small arrived at this port on May 13, having left Cape de Verde Islands forty days before. Twenty eight days before her arrival 1 of her passengers became ill with an eruptic disease. On her arrival at this port the case was diagnosed as smallpox by the quarantine officer and confirmed by another physician and myself. The crew and passengers were immediately vaccinated. At that time no other person on board showed any signs of illness. Since then, however, 1 child and 2 adults have come down with mild cases of smallpox. All four have been transferred to the smallpox hospital at this port and the vessel quarantined. There are about 70 persons on board of this small vessel and there appears to be a good chance that others may be infected.

Respectfully, JOHN T. BULLARD, Acting Assistant Surgeon, U. S. M. H. S.
